2. the typed letters "prod.and" in the first line of paragraph one in the document in dispute (Exhibit Lor. 10) were typed at the same time as other typed letters in the same line thereof;
 3. the typed letters "prod.and" in line three of the last paragraph in the typed document (Exhibit Lor. 10) were typed at the same time as other typed letters in the same line;
 4. the typed letters in the document in dispute (Exhibit Lor. 10) i.e.: prod.and in the first line of paragraph one and on line three of the last paragraph were typed by the typewriter that was used for typing other letters in such document; and
 5. the ink used for typing the letters "prod.and" in first line of paragraph one and line three of the last paragraph of the document in dispute (Exhibit Lor. 10) is the same kind of ink that was used for typing other words therein.

Verification
Results and Expert's
Opinions

Verification and consideration are as follows:

1. Having thoroughly examined the two English signatures in blue ink subscribed in the documents in dispute (Exhibit Lor. 10 and Exhibit Lor. 177) against Mr. Noboru Tsuburaya's English signature shown in the specimen documents mentioned above, we found that the styles and characteristics of those letters and their line patterns are different (please see examples pointed out in the image attached to this report, page 3 – page 6). Our opinion is that such signatures were not made by the same person.
2. Having thoroughly compared the typed letters "prod.and" in the first line of paragraph one of the document in dispute (Exhibit Lor. 10) with other letters in the same line and found that they were not typed in the same alignment (pointed out in the image attached to this report, page 7). Our opinion is that those letters were not typed at the same time.

3. Having thoroughly compared the typed letters "prod.and" in line three of the last paragraph of the document in dispute (Exhibit Lor. 10) with other letters in the same line and found that they were not typed in the same alignment (pointed out in the image attached to this report, page 7). Our opinion is that those letters were not typed at the same time.
4. Having thoroughly compared the typed letters "prod.and" on the first line of paragraph one and in line three of the last paragraph of the document in dispute (Exhibit Lor. 10) with other typed letters in those documents. As the characteristics and size of those letters were similar to each other and no significant mark (defect) was detected, we are unable to give any opinion as evidence on this matter.
5. Having thoroughly compared the ink used for typing the letters "prod.and" on the first line, paragraph one and line three, last paragraph of the document in dispute (Exhibit Lor. 10) with the ink used for typing other words in the same document and found that their physical properties are identical, it is our opinion that the ink in question is of the same kind.
